

Editor's Postscript
By Susan Copeland Henry

Well, here we are, with another year of successful teaching at some times and learning from our mistakes at others. I am glad that so many have been able to publish in Connexions this year. I have enjoyed editing the articles because they come from such vastly different disciplines, and my interests are quite eclectic. I also appreciate the efforts of the Editorial Board; they were responsive and insightful in their efforts to produce the best articles for publication. I deliberately sent Editorial Board members articles that were outside their disciplines, so I hope that they each learned something about the way scholars in other disciplines write and publish. I certainly have.

I look forward to the conference in Pittsburgh! Christina Shorall has done a terrific job with the conference preparations, and I know that she has organized the sessions and other daily events very well. I also look forward to the Friday night event, the river cruise, which will be quite a celebration. I hope to see you all there.

This is such an intellectually stimulating and socially gifted group of people, largely because the creativity that is manifest in the classroom is also manifest in playful and humorous fashions when the conference day is over. ISETA conferences become a beacon of pleasure through the course of the year; my CCSU colleague and dear friend Joyce Swofford and I anticipate it and talk about it for months ahead of time. I also keep in touch with ISETA people online throughout the year, and they – read “you” – are supportive and kind in times of both happiness and sorrow. What a great bunch of folks.
